Update to the transaction costs for the 2023 financial year

Fidante Partners Limited and Fidante Partners Services Limited (together Fidante) have completed an annual review of the transaction costs incurred for each fund whereby Fidante acts as Responsible Entity.

All funds deemed to have had a material change in transaction costs associated with the management of that fund when compared to the transaction costs currently disclosed in the offer document, are listed on the following page.

Please review the transaction costs for each fund alongside the current product disclosure statement and additional information booklet (if applicable) on issue. These can be found on the Fidante website listed below or by contacting the Fidante Investor Services team on 1300 721 637 during Sydney business hours.

What causes changes in transaction costs?

The transaction costs for a fund can increase or decrease for several reasons. Please find a few examples of potential causes for a change in the annual transactional and operational costs below:

- If the average size of the fund has decreased since the previous period, the transaction costs calculated as a percentage of the total fund size may be higher. The opposite goes for a large increase in the size of a fund.
- An increase in trading activity may cause an increase to the transaction costs for a fund. This is because trading activity may incur costs such as brokerage, settlement costs, clearing costs, or stamp duty. This increased trading activity may be due to portfolio turnover, deployment of capital from applications, or the sale of securities to fund withdrawals.
- An increase or decrease in the amount able to be recovered from the buy/sell spread which impacts the overall net transaction and operational costs for the fund.

¹Transaction costs are the costs associated with the buying and selling of the Fund's assets. These costs include brokerage, settlement costs, clearing costs, stamp duty and other government taxes or charges and include the transactional and operational costs incurred by the underlying assets. Transaction costs are recovered from the assets of the Fund as and when they are incurred. The amount quoted reflects the transaction costs not recovered by the buy/sell spread for the respective financial year (adjusted to reflect a 12-month period), including our reasonable estimates where information about actual costs was unavailable at the date of each Fund's respective PDS.

²Total fees and costs equals the sum of management costs, performance fees (if applicable) and net transaction costs.
